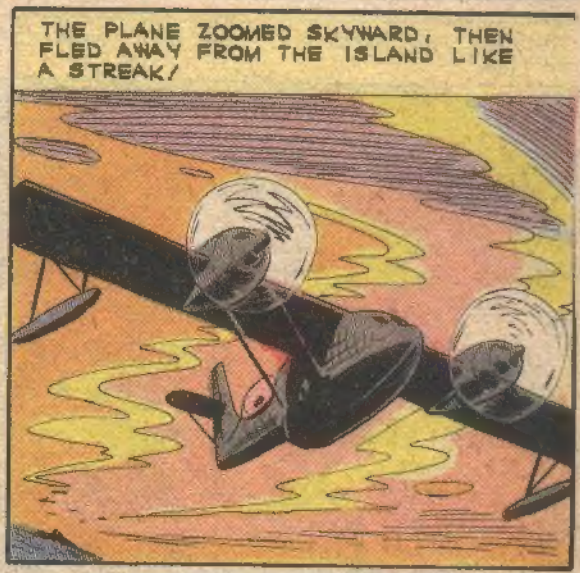
THEY...THEY'RE SWINGING WIDE/ THEY SAW IT...THEY SAW IT...
OH, BOB/

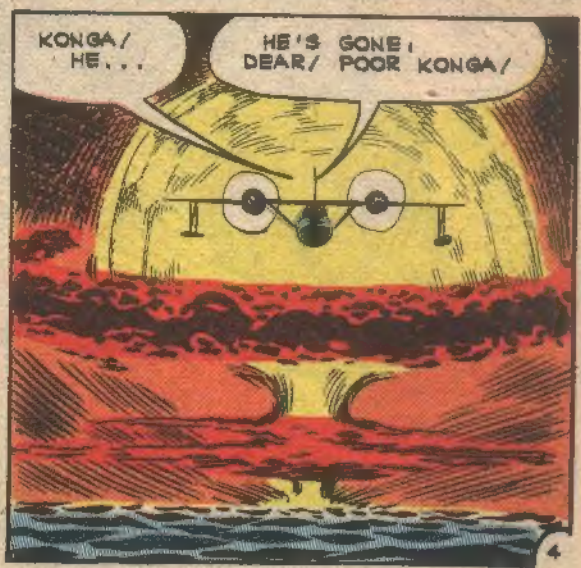
A FEW MINUTES LATER...

YOU HAD A NARROW ESCAPE/ HURRY UP, FOLKS/ WE'VE GOT TO TAKE OFF IN A HURRY/
B...BUT KONGA/ WE'LL HAVE TO COME BACK FOR HIM...



THE PLANE ZOOMED SKYWARD, THEN FLED AWAY FROM THE ISLAND LIKE A STREAK/

LISTEN, BACK THERE ON THE ISLAND WE LEFT...
WHATEVER YOU LEFT...IT'S TOO LATE NOW/ LOOK BACK/



KONGA/ HE...
HE'S GONE, DEAR/ POOR KONGA/

BUT THE SENSITIVE EARS OF THE HUGE BEAST HAD PICKED UP THE WHINE OF THE BOMB'S DESCENT THROUGH SPACE...

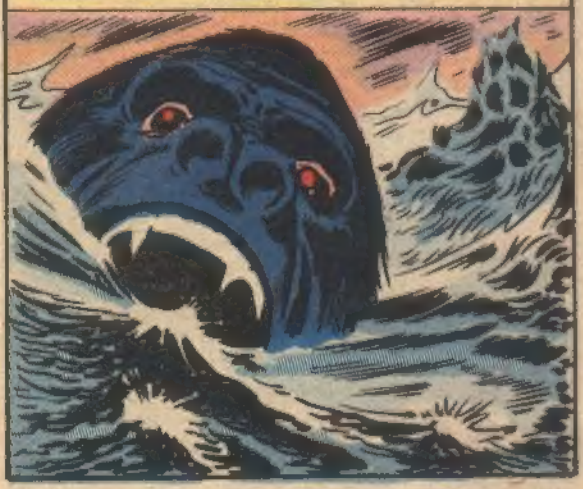
HIS SENSES RANG A TOCSIN, WARNING HIM OF DANGER/ HE RAN TO THE SHORE...

AND AS THE BOMB HIT HIS BODY WAS HURTLING THROUGH THE AIR AND INTO THE WATER/

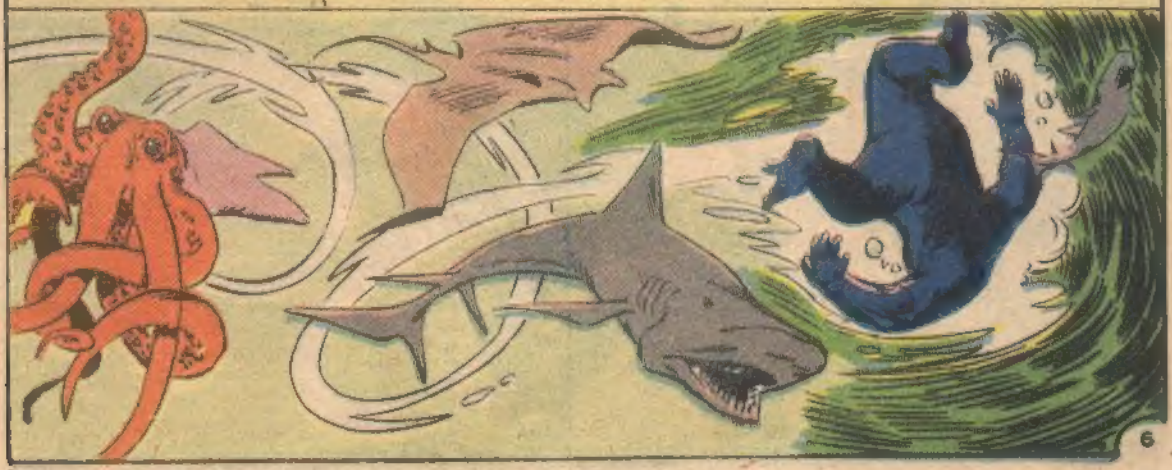
HIS TREMENDOUS WEIGHT CARRIED HIM DEEP/ BUT THE AWFUL POWER OF THE HYDROGEN BOMB EXPLOSION SMASHED THROUGH THE WATER...

HE TRIED TO FIGHT HIS WAY TO THE SURFACE, BUT THE HURRICANE-CHURNED WATERS BATTERED HIM, HOLDING HIM FROM THE SURFACE/

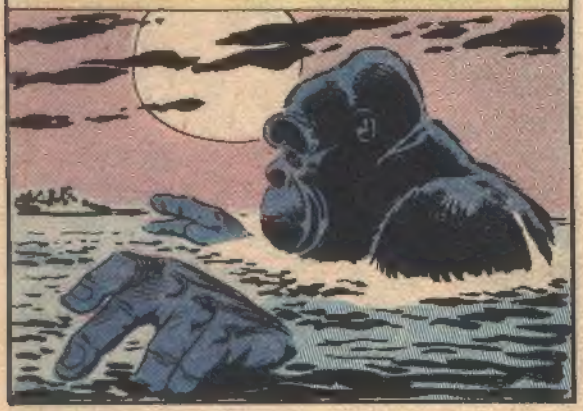
TWICE HE MANAGED TO REACH THE SURFACE AND FILL HIS TORTURED LUNGS WITH PRECIOUS AIR/



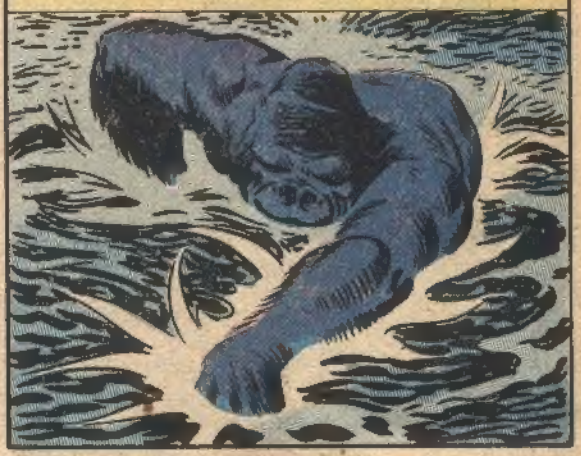
MEANWHILE, FIGHTING FOR HIS LIFE IN THE CRAZED SEA, KONGA WAS NOT AWARE THAT THE BATTERING WATERS, PUSHING HIM OUT AND AWAY FROM THE TITANIC EXPLOSION, HAD CARRIED HIM HUNDREDS OF MILES FROM THE DEMOLISHED ISLAND WITH EXPRESS TRAIN SPEED/



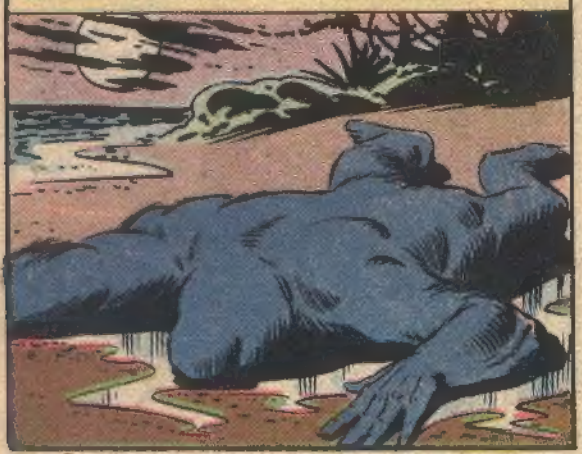
TIME SEEMED TO STAND STILL FOR THE GIANT SIMIAN AS DAYS AND NIGHTS PASSED, UNTIL AT LAST THE RACING, BUBBLING MADNESS OF THE SEA SUBSIDED/



IN THE DIM DISTANCE HE SAW LAND, AND TOWARD IT HE MADE HIS TIRED WAY/

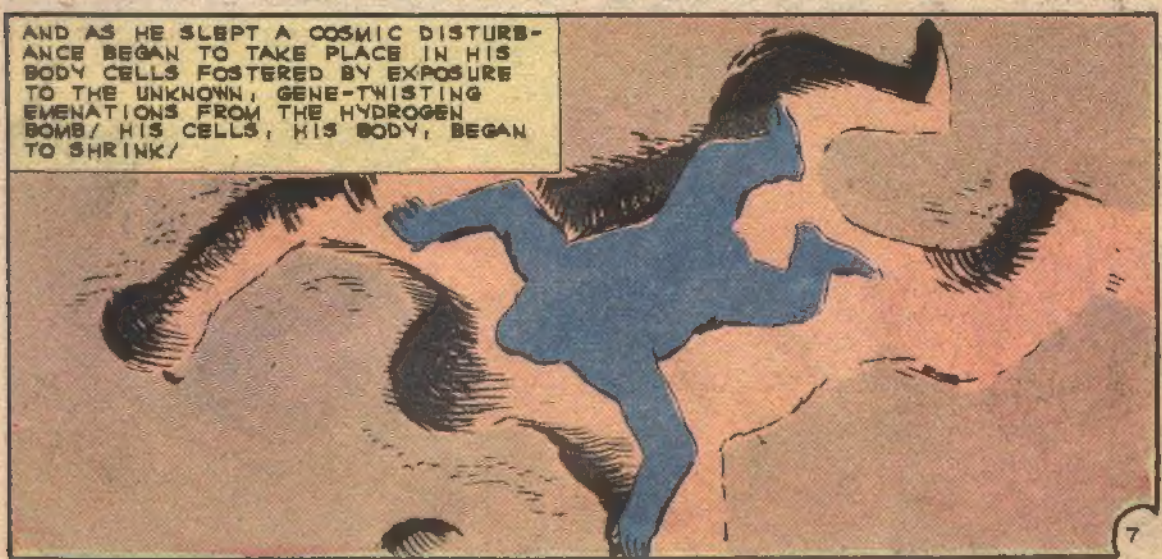


UTTERLY EXHAUSTED, KONGA DRAGGED HIMSELF UP FROM THE WATER TO DRY LAND AND THERE FELL FULL LENGTH INTO AN EXHAUSTED COMA/



HE SLEPT, NOT HEARING THE JUNGLE SOUNDS, THE NOISES OF AFRICA, THE DARK CONTINENT, THE LAND SHROUDED IN MYSTERY/

AND AS HE SLEPT A COSMIC DISTURBANCE BEGAN TO TAKE PLACE IN HIS BODY CELLS FOSTERED BY EXPOSURE TO THE UNKNOWN, GENE-TWISTING EMENATIONS FROM THE HYDROGEN BOMB/ HIS CELLS, HIS BODY, BEGAN TO SHRINK/



WHEN DAWN SHED ITS LIGHT OVER THE LAND, SENDING WEAKENED FINGERS THROUGH THE DANK, CLOSE FOLIAGE OF THE JUNGLE, KONGA STIRRED/ HE WAS NO LONGER THE GIGANTIC APE HE HAD BEEN/ HE HAD SHRUNKEN TO A SIZE ONLY A BIT LARGER THAN A LARGE GORILLA/

A RUSTLING OF FOLIAGE CAME TO HIM/ DANGER LURKED IN THE JUNGLE, AND HE WHIRLED...

THE SNARLS THAT ISSUED FROM HIS LIPS WERE ANSWERED IN KIND/

OUT OF THE JUNGLE HAD CREPT APES...GIGANTIC APES, ALMOST AS LARGE AS HE, APES WHO SENSED HIS STRANGNESS AND HAD COME TO KILL/

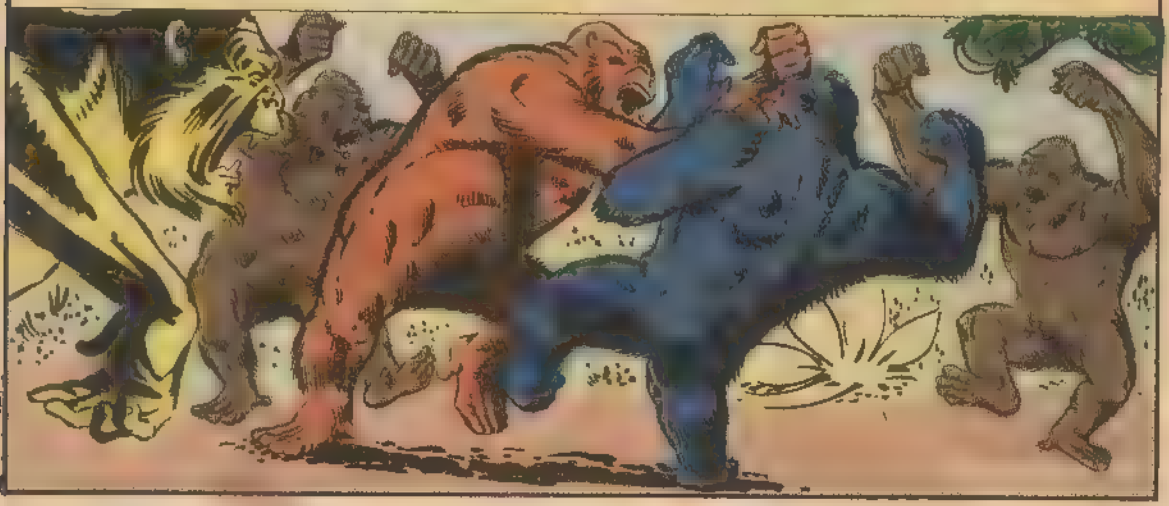
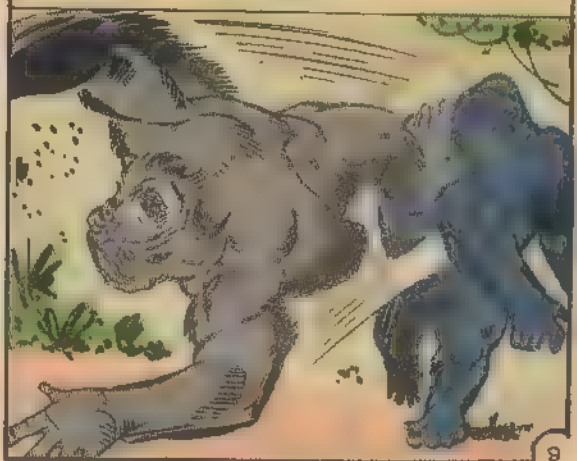
THE GREAT APES RUSHED IN AND CLOSED WITH KONGA IN ABYSMAL BATTLE/



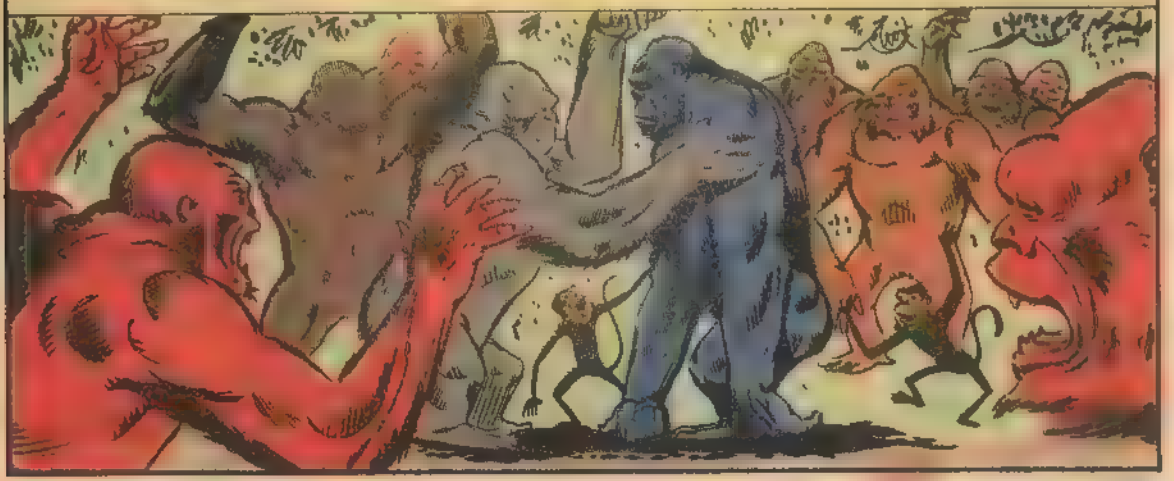
THEN ENSUED A FRIGHTFUL FIGHT TORN FROM THE BEGINNING OF TIME WHEN THE ANCESTORS OF MAN FOUGHT EACH AGAINST THE OTHER FOR SUPREMACY/

BUT, THOUGH KONGA HAD SHRUNK IN SIZE, HIS STRENGTH WAS STILL ALMOST AS GREAT AS IT HAD BEEN BEFORE, AND GRADUALLY HE OVERCAME HIS OPPONENTS/

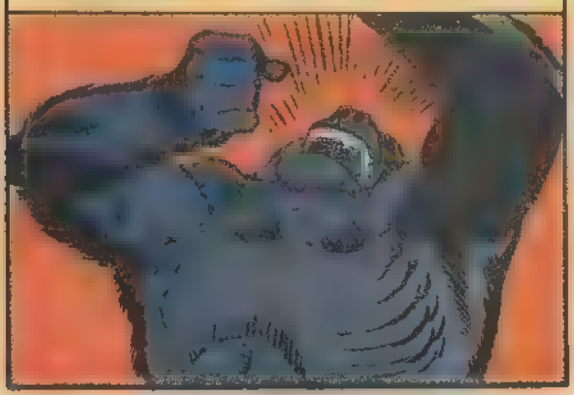
AND FINALLY HE LAY LOW HIS LAST ATTACKER, A HUGE, SCARRED PRIMATE, THE KING OF THE APES/



THEN, FROM THE JUNGLE SCORES OF APES CAME AND PROCLAIMED KONGA THE NEW KING OF THE APES/



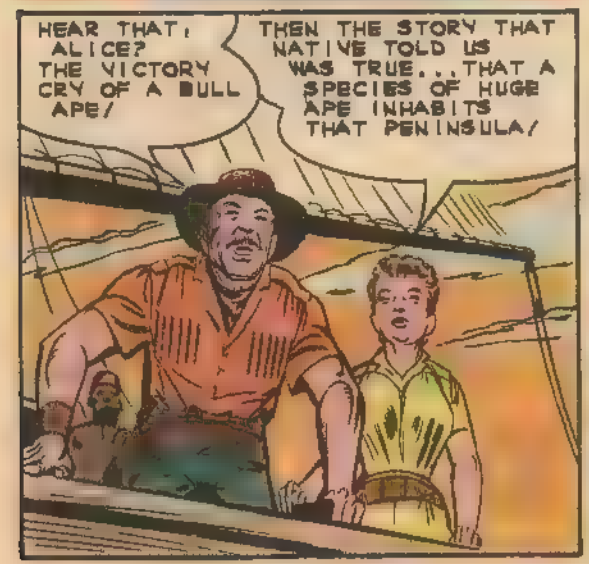
AND KONGA BEAT HIS MASSIVE CHEST AND ROARED HIS DEFIANCE OF ALL THINGS THAT WALKED OR CRAWLED ON THE EARTH, FOR HE WAS NOW THE KING...KONGA HAD AT LAST FOUND HIS NICHE, HIS PLACE IN A WORLD THAT UNDERSTOOD AND SUITED HIM/



THE HIDEOUS ROARS CARRIED OUT AND AWAY TO REACH A SMALL CRAFT APPROACHING THE JUNGLE PENNINSULA ON THE OFF SIDE/

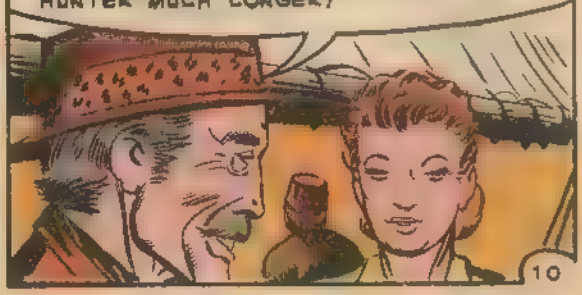
HEAR THAT, ALICE? THE VICTORY CRY OF A BULL APE/

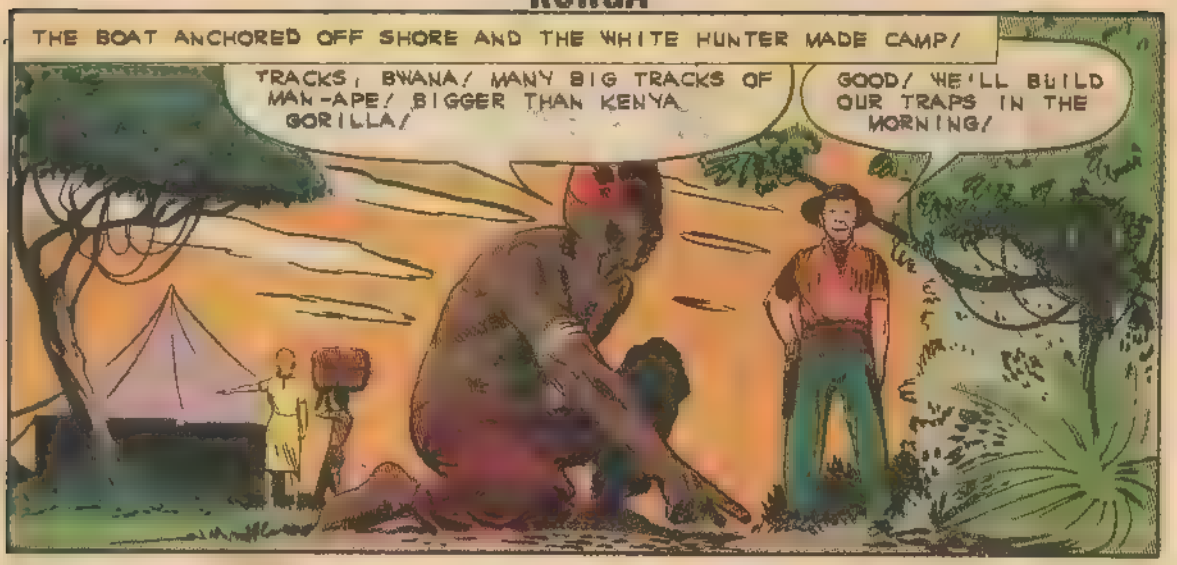
THEN THE STORY THAT NATIVE TOLD US WAS TRUE...THAT A SPECIES OF HUGE APE INHABITS THAT PENINSULA/



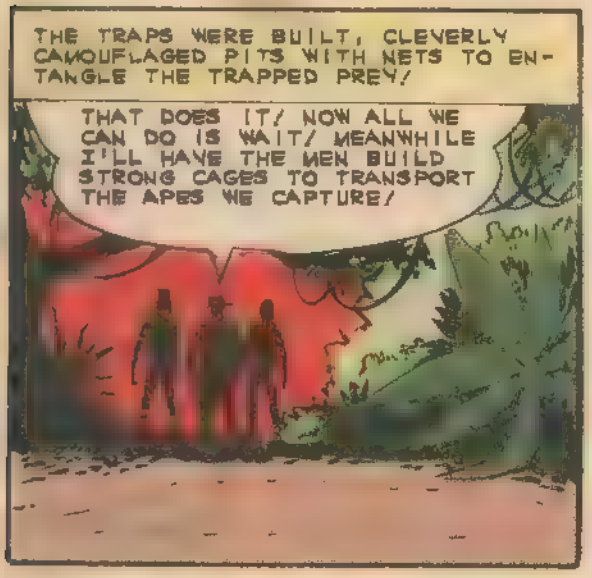
THE WHITE HUNTER, BEN MARSDEN, TURNED TO HIS WIFE, HIS EYES EAGER FOR THE ADVENTURE AHEAD/

I HOPE SO/ IF IT'S TRUE WE'LL TRAP SOME OF THEM AND SELL THEM AT HIGH PRICES, ENOUGH SO THAT I CAN RETIRE AND WE'LL BUILD THAT COTTAGE YOU WANT IN YORKSHIRE/ I'M GETTING TOO OLD AND MY MANY WOUNDS HURT TOO MUCH TO CONTINUE BEING A WHITE HUNTER MUCH LONGER/

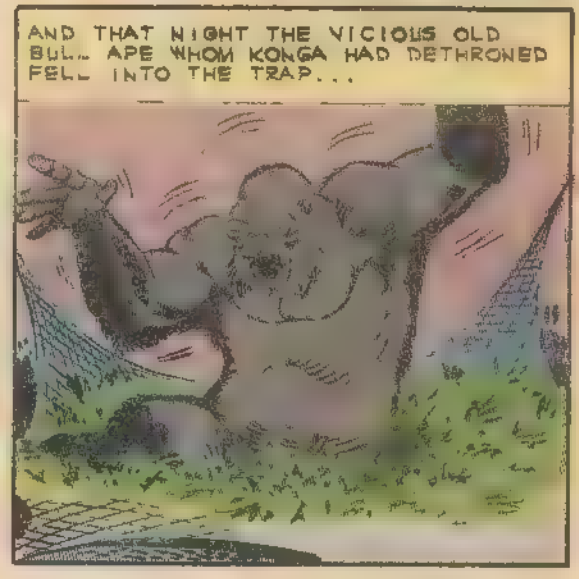




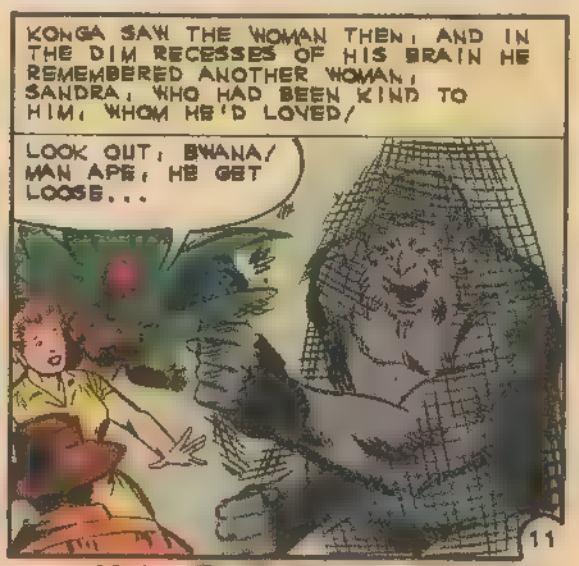
THE BOAT ANCHORED OFF SHORE AND THE WHITE HUNTER MADE CAMP/
TRACKS, BWANA/ MANY BIG TRACKS OF MAN-APE/ BIGGER THAN KENYA GORILLA/
GOOD/ WE'LL BUILD OUR TRAPS IN THE MORNING/



THE TRAPS WERE BUILT, CLEVERLY CAMOUFLAGED PITS WITH NETS TO ENTANGLE THE TRAPPED PREY/
THAT DOES IT/ NOW ALL WE CAN DO IS WAIT/ MEANWHILE I'LL HAVE THE MEN BUILD STRONG CAGES TO TRANSPORT THE APES WE CAPTURE/



IN THE MORNING, AS THE WHITE HUNTER HAULED HIM OUT, KONGA WATCHED FROM THE JUNGLE/
ALICE, COME HERE/ WE'VE GOT ONE/ A MAGNIFICENT SPECIMEN/



KONGA SAW THE WOMAN THEN, AND IN THE DIM RECESSES OF HIS BRAIN HE REMEMBERED ANOTHER WOMAN, SANDRA, WHO HAD BEEN KIND TO HIM, WHOM HE'D LOVED/
LOOK OUT, BWANA/ MAN APE, HE GET LOOSE...

ROCKS OF ROGONGI

"It just doesn't seem possible," sighed young Lieutenant John Pearson "A week ago I was in London living in the twentieth century, the century of the jet plane, the automobile, the radio, television, and a thousand and one other things that the human mind has created. Today I am here in the village the Rogongi. Living in a past that must be at least ten thousands years old. And in two years we have to give these people self government. I shudder to think what will happen."

"Then you should speak to their king," smiled wise Captain Winston Murhill who had been in the Ugander Territory for almost ten years. "In spite of the leopard skin he wears and the large earings he displays he was educated at Oxford and holds two graduate degrees. He points out to visitors that his people have solved a problem bothering our Western civilization for many years. How to abolish war. The Rogongi have never fought with any other tribes."

"No wonder," snapped back the young army officer. "They still practice witchcraft. That pile of rocks they worship sends chills down my spine. They talk to those rocks at dawn as though there were spirits in them. So I can see how other tribes feel it best to be at peace with the Rogongi."

"I guess you feel witchcraft is something of the past," continued Captain Winston Murhill "You must remember that we in England once went through a period when we felt that witches were very real and that they could injure others. We passed laws against them and punished them. Here a witch or a wizard is considered a very important person. If you have an enemy you go to the witch and pay a fee. Then the witch prepares a curse by writing the name of the person on a stone and that person suffers until he or she has solved the situation with the person they have injured. A rather primitive but effective way of handling matters out here."

"But suppose it happened to be one of us," demanded the young officer. "What then?"

"It would be handled in a different way," said the Captain and then anxious to turn the conversation into other directions added, "You have only seen Colonel Harrows, your future father-in-law, twice. He will be back in three days. He had to attend a conference at Nairobi. I understand that when this area gets self-goverment, he will remain here as the Queen's Representative. The king has asked for his continued presence."

A soldier appeared outside the hut where the two men were seated and saluted.

"Beg your pardon, Captain, but the witch Gozga is at it again. He is outside the hut of a native who refuses to pay a debt to Mozill. The Colonel has left orders in regard to Mozill. What do we do?"

"A delicate situation," explained the captain to the young lieutenant. "Mozill is an usurer, at least from our point of view. So we have to try to get him to cut down his demands and tell Gozga to call off the curse."

"I just dont understand this. What is the matter with these natives? If one of these so-called witches puts a curse on a native why should he get sick?" demanded Lieutenant John Pearson. "I will concede that the power of suggestion is very strong. If you feel a witch is doing something to you, then I can see you yourself would create a situation of fear and suffering. What a lot of nonsense."

The captain looked at the soldier and said nothing. For the moment he could remember when once that was his attitude. In terms of modern psychology he had analyzed so-called witchcraft. But the years had brought him a certain measure of wisdom. Especially in regard to things he once thought he knew everything about to the smallest detail. He shrugged his shoulders.

"Let us go out and see what is happening.'

The two officers and the soldier walked a short distance to a hut. The village was apparently deserted. However the natives were following a strict rule. When the witch doctor was preparing a "Chi'gaga" or "Curse" — they had to remain indoors with their eyes closed. Otherwise they, too, might be affected by it. The three stopped in front of a hut outside of which was a small pile of stones with a writing on one stone. The witch — or witch doctor — was on his two bended knees. He was chanting something over and over again.

'What kind of nonsense is this?" said the young lieutenant.

And before the captain could stop him, he kicked the pile of stones with his left foot. The witch arose and faced him.

'You doom yourself," he said. "That was forbidden."

Then the witch turned around and walked away. Captain Winston Murhill knew there would be trouble.

"We'd better get back to our hut and wait until the Colonel comes back tomorrow morning. You should not have done that. Now I can't even talk to Mozill." When they entered the hut there was a small stone on the Captain's desk. There was writing on it.

"The witch doctor has started on you," he explained. "He has written your name on this stone which means that you will suffer."

"But he went in a different direction." said the young lieutenant. 'How could be have gotten here and put the stone on the table? Look at the two guards outside. Ask them."

The captain knew the answer he would get that neither of the guards had seen anyone or anything. But to satisfy the young officer he did that and got the expected answer. They sat in the hut until after supper. There was a peculiar stillness in the village. It should have been a clear bright night but clouds were starting to cover up the few visible stars.

'I have a slight headache," admitted Lieutenant John Pearson. 'I think this was a bit too much for me. I"ll retire early if you don't mind."

At two in the morning, the young officer awoke. He felt something burning inside of him. To his surprise, Captain Murhill was seated on a chair. He took a thermometer and put it into the mouth of the sick man. Then he looked at the reading

"You have a fever of 105. Take these two pills. They should help to bring the fever down."

Some of the soldiers took turns watching the feverish man. At ten the next morning, Colonel Uderwood arrived at the village. Captain Murhill explained the unfortunate incident that had happened. The Colonel took a look at his future son-in-law who was now half dead to the world. Then he went to the king's hut where the ruler and the witch were waiting for him.

"You should not have done that, remarked the Colonel to the witch. "Remember our agreement. Not ever a curse on any of my men."

"But he did the unforgivable," pointed out the witch doctor. "He threw down the Rocks of Rongongi. The spirit of Resha demanded he be punished."

'He has been punished enough, emphasized the Colonel. 'He must recover in two days. I will see that he leaves and goes home. He is to marry my daughter."

'You yourself will have to ask the Rocks for forgiveness," said the ruler gently. "There is no other choice."

The Colonel opened his shirt. On his chest was the mark of a small rock. He went to a corner where was a pile of rocks and bent down on his knees.

"Oh, Resha, great spirit of the rocks,' he began. "You have appointed me as one of the chosen few to know thy magic. I ask of thee this favor. Spare the life of the fool who knew not what he did. He will leave if you spare him and never return here again. This is my request. Grant it, I beg of thee."

Suddenly a blue flame appeared on top of the pile of rocks. It grew larger until it almost had a ghostly form. It moved around the hut and then stopped in front of the witch doctor. Then the flame vanished

"Resha has granted the request," said the witch doctor. "Do not ever blame me. I did not do this. He will recover."

Two days passed and the young lieutenant was up on his feet though a bit weak in the knees. He was ready to leave for the coast and then for England.

'We are very happy you will come to the wedding," He told his future father-in-law. "I work in the war office in London so I shall always be with Louise. But tell me one thing. How can anyone believe in this nonsense about witches and witchcraft? I just had a touch of the fever and I bet that old witch doctor thinks he worked a curse on me."

We can all be foolish, can't we," smiled the Colonel. "Especially in a world where there is so much to learn. My love to my daughter."
